

Emily Hamner
AP Literature and Composition
Mrs. Rutan
7 October 2015

That Day I Realized

Walking into school the very first day;
I went down the elongated hallway with nothing to say.
Everyone around me was identical in a way;
Not a single sole was familiar.
I looked around for someone who could salvage me,
From the isolation I had dreaded.
Not knowing what to do,
I took a gander around and then I saw you.

Four short years later it happened all over again;
Relocating into a new school, with different classes ahead,
I knew it wouldn't be tranquil
Not having you around.
My best friend and I would be alone in the horde,
But I learned quick deprived of even a stare
It was quaint but vulgar; when I saw you dangling with the other crowd
Another four years fulfilled and down.

Only four more years and then I could quit
Stirring about ready for another hit
"It was never really very lit."
I sought to be out of there as rapidly as I could,
Making new acquaintances, as I distinguished long ago;
I soon grasped that it didn't make sense
That colleague I made back in elementary school hadn't been very intelligent.

I wasn't quite sure what to expect, the day I looked back on all my regrets
I knew this was it, everything was set;
To distinguish what to do and I had nothing else to say
I held my head tall and made my decision
That I didn't need you, and I had my own voice
I found myself that day, you weren't significant
But I, myself was and that was important.

Recollecting the memories, I knew it was right
The period I eventually established the light,
You had transformed and I already knew,
You became obscure inside your innovative crew;

I only need myself and no solitary like you
I had to make do; deprived of someone like you.